I am trying to solve a problem where I have several configuration changes that have to be done before performing some actions. So I am attempting to implement this the same way as mentioned in the referenced question. In this case I have a config file that is read in a config parser class and then I have the class that I am trying to wait for. I am waiting for the config to complete by overriding `ReadConfigAsync` and calling the base implementation in the `Config.ReadConfig()` method. However, this is not a good solution as the parser will fire a dummy `ReadConfig()` in the process. Hence I am attempting to use the `waitAndExecuteAsync()` method however it seems to end up waiting for the first config to complete, even if the second config isn't ready (or I guess it waits as long as it takes for the first config to complete). Am I going about this the right way or is there a better way of doing this. `public void ReadConfig(List configs) { // Remove the first config from the list as this is the dummy config which is used to fire a config that the parser expects. List tempList = configs.FirstOrDefault()?? configs.ToList(); // We store the list of configs that need to be executed as we can't do them without a config complete.`
